Hello again,

We usually don't require that employees sign anything when they resign, so unfortunately we don't have anything but memory to go off from. This employee was stationed at an ongoing job that was not cancelled by the client, so her lack of work claims are not true. Her last day of work was 1/31. on 02/01, before her scheduled shift, she came into the office to discuss with us that she wasn't able to continue working because she needed to take care of her health and her kids and that she was not interested in picking up gigs (we had several open jobs that she was qualified for). On 2/11 she was officially inactivated due to her resignation.

Hi Christyann,

Do we have any documentation for her resignation or did she sign anything in the office? The reason for separation in her unemployment documentation is lack of work. Do you have the date she came in to the office to resign?
